Secrets on the tip of your tongue: a taste story from Udon Thani to New York

Born in Udon Thani , a small town in northeastern Thailand , Amita's cooking enlightenment began at her grandmother's stove. The land cultivated by her parents gave birth to the freshest herbs and ingredients, and the fireworks in the market taught her that food is a bond across cultures. As an adult, she traveled all over Thailand's countryside and cities, absorbing culinary wisdom from all over the world, and finally realized her dream in the melting pot city of New York with Patron Restaurant - this is not only a window to Thai flavors, but also a stage for her to tell stories with her cuisine.

Thai green curry.

The Poetry of the Forest: A Symphony of the Sensory World in the Name of Nature

The Magic Forest is not just an ordinary menu, but a love letter to the rainforest. Each dish uses local organic ingredients from Thailand to depict the magical vitality of the forest:

- Coconut Curry Beef Short Ribs - Slow-cooked beef short ribs soaked in rich coconut milk curry, like vines entwined deep in the rainforest, gently enveloping your taste buds.
- Basil Half Duck - The duck has crispy skin and rich meat, intertwined with the spicy aroma of Thai holy basil, like a bird flying over the treetops, leaving a fresh mark.
- Crispy sea bass with sweet and sour sauce - the fish skin is fried until golden and crispy, and topped with Thai sweet and sour sauce made with palm sugar, which looks like the reflection of a forest reflected in the rippling stream.

Chef's words: Recreate the magic in your memory with cooking

"I want every bite of food to be a ticket to explore the natural world of Thailand," Amita says. "These dishes carry the wisdom of my grandmother, the bustle of the market, and the taste of earth and dew—they are the real 'magic forest' of my life."

From now on, Kaoshan sincerely invites you to embark on this journey of immersion in the five senses . Here, the colors on the plate are the flowers and fruits of the rainforest, the aroma is the wind blowing through the branches and leaves, and the taste is the deepest embrace of the Thai land.